Expanded Eligibility for the American Council of Learned Societies Fellowship Program

The American Council of Learned Societies \(ACLS\) Fellowship Program is the Council's longest-running program supporting research in the humanities and interpretive social sciences. Since the COVID-19 pandemic, only early-career scholars could apply for this fellowship. For the 2024-25 competition, the ACLS has expanded eligibility requirements to accept applications from eligible scholars across all career stages, from recent PhDs through senior scholars. Interested applicants are encouraged to contact Research Development Services for support in developing proposals to this ACLS program.

Graduate Student Resources

The Office for the Vice President of Research and Innovation provides a range of resources, trainings, and tools for graduate students seeking funding for their research, including a website with proposal writing resources, recorded videos about finding and applying to funding outside the UO, and important policies and procedures regarding applications for external funding. Research Development Services welcomes inquiries from students seeking assistance with their research applications.
